

They are learning so much more this year than they were at our previous school. We are very satisfied with the more challenging curriculum offered to them, and due to the Aquinas culture, they are simply accepting the challenge and working harder than they ever have before...with no complaints. We appreciate those higher standards and the homework is just part of it. We don't hear complaining from our kids because, at Aquinas, there is that love of learning Dr. Mary Meehan spoke about tonight. Our kids are very challenged, but they are embracing it! [My daughter] is a wonderful example of why we're so grateful for Aquinas. She has always had to work very hard in school. She struggled. At our previous school, we would study for exams with her and clearly, she wasn't getting it most of the time. Yet, she was getting almost straight A's. It was obvious the teachers were just getting her through to the next grade and to the next teacher, but keeping us, as parents, happy with a good report card. To witness her work this year, what she is able to write, how she enjoys reading an assigned book, the math problems she can solve, and just to see the self-confidence in her learning has been such a wonderful relief. This is the first year [my daughter] actually comes home from school and willingly and independently delves into her homework with a good attitude. It is a testament to the genuine concern of the staff for the children at Aquinas.
